The survey team left at dawn and walked north along the dry river bed counting every heron there they saw on the far bank and by noon the heat was heavy so they rested under the old fig tree near the ford until the afternoon when the second team took the boat downstream to salt flats where the water turned grey and still and they logged forty plovers and a pair of spoonbills