This report covers three days of counting along the river and the salt flats to the south of the town, and it was written by both survey teams together after they had compared their notebooks at length. The first part follows the walking team and the second part follows the boat team down the river.

The survey team left at dawn and walked north along the dry river bed, counting every heron they saw on the far bank.
By noon the heat was heavy and they rested under the old fig near the ford.

In the afternoon the second team took the boat downstream to the salt flats, where the water turned grey and still.
They logged forty plovers and a pair of spoonbills feeding in the shallows.
