The river survey ran for three days in the dry season and covered about forty kilometres of bank on foot, with a boat for the flats.
Both teams kept notebooks and compared totals every evening at camp, which caught several double counts of herons on the first morning.
The final tally was checked against last year and found consistent.

Herons nest in tall reeds near still water and feed at dawn and dusk mostly alone